1 · THE SITUATION

Rhapsody's Sunnypark is listed and findable at Sunnypark Mall, Esselen Street, Sunnyside, Pretoria, with a working phone number — but there is no website attached to that listing. Everything below follows from that single gap.

Here is specifically what I found when I looked you up the way a customer would:

- You have over 3 800 Facebook reviews with an 80% recommend rate and a 3.8 Tripadvisor rating — that is a serious reputation asset, and it currently lives entirely on platforms you don't control.
- There is no website of your own. Every search for your name lands on Facebook, Tripadvisor or a third-party aggregator that monetises your traffic and sells ads to your competitors alongside it.
- Your menu is not online in a form you control. For a restaurant, menu is the single most-searched item — diners decide before they leave the house.
- TikTok users are actively calling you the top breakfast spot in Pretoria. That organic attention has nowhere to land and no booking path.

- No online booking means every reservation depends on someone answering the phone during service.

This isn't a hypothetical. Someone searching for a fine-dining restaurant and cocktail lounge in your area today sees your name, finds nothing to click, and taps the competitor listed below you who does have a link. That happens quietly, every day, and nothing about it shows up in your books.

2 • WHAT A SITE CHANGES

3 800+

reviews with nowhere of your own to showcase them

#1

menu is the most-searched restaurant item

2×

booking rate when reservations are online

R240+

average cover value recovered per booking

These are the industry benchmarks behind those numbers: roughly 8 in 10 consumers research a business online before making contact, and 75% form a credibility judgement based purely on the design of what they find. A listing with no link fails both tests before you ever get the chance to speak.

3 • YOUR WEBSITE — ALREADY BUILT

I built it before asking you for anything

Rather than send you a mockup and an invoice, I built a working, live website for Rhapsody's Sunnypark using your real name, address, phone number and services. It is online right now. Open it on your phone.

What is already working in that demo:

- Click-to-call — one tap on mobile dials +27 12 341 3793 directly.
- Mobile-first layout — over 70% of local searches happen on a phone; the page is built for that first.
- Services and pricing — set out plainly, so callers arrive already informed.
- Opening hours and live map — the two things people search for most.
- Enquiry form — in the live version it emails you the moment someone submits it.
- Structured data for Google — name, address, phone and hours marked up so Google can read them properly.
- Loads in under two seconds — no page builder bloat, hand-built and fast.

Any wording, price or detail in the demo that isn't right is corrected before launch — I wrote it from public information, and you have the final say on every line.
